

A TACIT THOUGHT

WEEKLY INSIGHTS AND VIEWS

12 May 2017

At our recent ISG conference, we noted that “risks appeared to be more political than macro-economic.”

Despite the undoubted upheaval associated with Trump, Brexit and the raft of European elections that will occur this year we tend to forget that large parts of the world economy are still operating well below potential, at least, relative to previous trends.

Even in the US, which is well on the way to full recovery, the Trump 4% growth target remains a long way off.

The point is that in a normal recovery episode we would now be seeing both stronger growth and higher inflation suggesting that the cycle was reaching the end of its natural life. This time around, the extent of the damage done by the last downturn has left economies profoundly scarred; the depth of the economic declines leaving a larger catch-up and the policy of austerity delaying the onset of mature recovery.

However, as we also noted at our conference, global growth indicators are signalling continued and, in some cases, accelerating recovery.

Greece is an interesting example. Oxford Economics has noted that the Greek depression has been worse than 95% of other crises including those in “war-torn” Congo in the early 1990s and Argentina in 1980 and 1995.

Nevertheless, despite all the privation, the Greek economy remains a member of the Euro and this year is likely to run a primary budget surplus of 4% or more. Much more importantly the yield on Greek government bonds has declined from a peak of 36% in 2012 to under 6% today. In other words, despite the politics, an economic recovery, of sorts, is setting in.

In many ways, Greece is just the very worst example of an economy that has simply failed to modernise.

Productivity is the key to growth and productivity demands investment. Greece still has a long road to travel but who can doubt that significant gains from economic modernisation cannot be made in Italy, Spain and Emmanuel Macron's France.

These large, important, economies are still operating below potential and therefore depriving themselves and the world of the demand that would go a long way toward absorbing abundant supply and restoring prosperity.

At Tacit we don't believe that that economies have yet “normalised.” The length and depth of the downturn implies a long and difficult recovery.

Nonetheless, one telling signal of economic normalisation is rising bond yields in the US but falling bond yields in Greece.

A TACIT THOUGHT

WEEKLY INSIGHTS AND VIEWS

CONTACT DETAILS

t: +44(0)203 051 6450

e: info@tacitim.com

w: www.tacitim.com

IMPORTANT DISCLAIMER: This document has been issued and approved by Tacit Investment Management. The information herein is not intended to be an offer to buy or sell, or a solicitation of an offer to buy or sell, any securities and has been obtained from, or is based upon, sources believed to be reliable; however no representation or warranty, express or implied, is made nor responsibility of any kind accepted either as to the accuracy, completeness or correctness of the information stated herein, or that material facts have not been omitted. Material contained in this report satisfies the regulatory provisions concerning independent investment research as defined in MiFID. Tacit Investment Management, its associate companies and/or their clients, directors and employees may own or have a position in the securities mentioned herein and may add to or dispose of any such securities. Please bear in mind that, before publishing a research recommendation, we may have acted upon it or made use of information on which it is based.

The views of reflected in this document is a matter of judgement at the time of writing and is subject to change without notice. In addition, Tacit Investment Management may issue other reports that are inconsistent with, and reach different conclusions from, the information presented in this report and is under no obligation to ensure that such other reports are brought to the attention of any recipient of this report. To the maximum extent possible at law, Tacit Investment Management does not accept any liability whatsoever arising from the use of the material or information contained herein.

The financial instruments discussed in this report may not be suitable for all investors, and investors must make their own informed decisions and seek their own advice regarding the appropriateness of investing in financial instruments or implementing strategies discussed herein. Any price shown is only an indication of the middle market price at the time of publication. Private clients should be aware that prices may fall as well as rise and the income derived from them may fluctuate. The value of securities and financial instruments is subject to currency exchange rate fluctuation that may have a positive or negative effect on the price of such securities or financial instruments. Tacit Investment Management does not provide any tax advice. Past performance is not necessarily a guide to future performance and you may not get back the original amount invested. Estimates of future performance are based on assumptions that may not be realised. Investments in general, and derivatives in particular, involve numerous risks, including, among others, market, counterparty default and liquidity risk. Investments referred to in this document may not be suitable for you and if you have any doubt about this you should contact your adviser for further advice.